

Ventilation within a confined space can be either natural (dilution), forced or local exhaust extraction. Mechanical ventilation devices must not create excessive noise levels and or introduce additional hazards within the space. Exhaust locations must be positioned at a location where they do not present a risk to nearby personnel.

 Document Reference - MAC-STE-STD-147