

Industry association disclosure – October 2024

The table below lists BHP's industry association memberships. It classifies the memberships in terms of their materiality, their home country and their broad purpose. Further information on these classifications is provided at the bottom of this document.

The information in the table was drawn from BHP's register of organisation memberships, as of October 2024, but excludes material memberships for which we have given notice to cease our membership (which may require a notice period prior to cessation).

In addition to the changes to material memberships published in our 2023 industry association review: Update, our material memberships have changed as follows:

- In order to prioritise our membership in other relevant organisations, we have:
  - ceased our membership of the Confederation of British Industry and the International Emissions Trading Association; and
  - given notice to cease our membership of the International Copper Association.
- Our existing membership of the Sociedad Nacional de Minería, Petróleo y Energía meets our criteria for a material industry association membership as annual membership fees now exceed US$100,000.
- Our existing membership of the Business Council of Canada meets our criteria for a material industry association membership as it is listed on Influence Map's ranking of industry associations.

Classifications

BHP is a member of many industry associations around the world. These associations tend to serve one of the following four purposes:

- General – the association seeks to advance the interests of the general business community in a particular jurisdiction.
- Sector-specific – the association seeks to advance the interests of a specific sector or a specific commodity.
- Issue-specific – the association seeks to address a specific issue or technical challenge.
- Bilateral/local – the association seeks to facilitate information-sharing and relationship-building between different countries or within a local community.

We also differentiate between our material and other association memberships. We consider an industry association to be 'material' if it meets at least one of the following two criteria:

- our base membership fee is equal to or greater than US$100,000; and/or
- there is significant stakeholder interest in the climate policy advocacy of the association (as determined by whether the association is listed on InfluenceMap's ranking of industry associations).
