

Industry association disclosure – November 2025

The table below lists BHP's industry association memberships. It classifies the memberships in terms of their materiality, their home country and their broad purpose. Further information on these classifications is provided at the bottom of this document.

The information in the table was drawn from BHP's register of organisation memberships, as of November 2025, but excludes material memberships for which we have given notice to cease our membership (which may require a notice period prior to cessation).

In addition to the changes to material memberships published in our 2025 Industry Association Review¹, our material memberships have changed as follows:

- We have joined the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, which is listed on Influence Map's ranking of industry associations as at November 2025.
- Our existing membership of the Instituto Brasileiro de Mineração now meets our criteria for a material industry association membership as it is listed on Influence Map's ranking of industry associations as at November 2025.
- Our existing membership of the Port Hedland Industries Council² now meets our criteria for a material industry association membership as its annual base membership fee for 2025 exceeded US$100,000.

Classifications

BHP is a member of many industry associations around the world. These associations tend to serve one of the following four purposes:

- General – the association seeks to advance the interests of the general business community in a particular jurisdiction.
- Sector-specific – the association seeks to advance the interests of a specific sector or a specific commodity.
- Issue-specific – the association seeks to address a specific issue or technical challenge.
- Bilateral/local – the association seeks to facilitate information-sharing and relationship-building between different countries or within a local community.

We also differentiate between our material and other association memberships. We consider and determine whether an industry association is deemed 'material' based on whether it meets at least one of the following two criteria:

- our base membership fee is equal to or greater than US$100,000; and/or
- there is significant stakeholder interest in the climate policy advocacy of the association (as determined by whether the association is listed on Influence Map's ranking of industry associations).
